L. C. Emmons, the Morrisville man who figured in an automobile accident near the Osola & Dunghi plant on the Montpelier road Sunday, was in the city yesterday and while here he took occasion to correct what he believes was a false impression of the side-swiping affair that sent Mrs. W. V. Hood of East Topsham to the City hospital. Mr. Emmons states that the Ford car driven by S. B. Hood, son of the injured woman, was attempting to pass him. The car operated by Mr. Emmons was on the west side of the highway and it was when the Ford brushed into him that the smaller car was forced into the ditch. Occupants of the Morrisville car were the first to reach Mrs. Hood as she lay in the ditch by the roadside and it was Mr. Emmons who took the woman to the City hospital. According to Mr. Emmons, his car was proceeding slowly when the Ford came up from the rear. Advice from the hospital indicate that Mrs. Hood's condition is somewhat improved. Neither Mr. Hood nor others in the Ford car, Mr. Emmons says, were disposed to blame him for the accident.

The killing of a bear near the Horace White place in Washington Monday night prompts an inquiry as to just how many members of the species have been killed in this locality in the last 50 years. L. M. Averill of Hillcrest thinks that Fred E. Downing's bear is among the first to be killed hereabouts in 60 years or more. Memory carries Mr. Averill back to his boyhood days and in a reminiscent mood he tells of the last bear to lose his life on Cobble hill. It was before the Civil war and Mr. Averill, as a mere boy, was going toward the schoolhouse in the Bradford district, so-called. In an orchard near the highway he spied a black creature that looked like a big shepherd dog. Closer inspection revealed the animal in its true nature and the school boy retraced his steps to alarm the neighborhood. When he returned from school that night, men in the neighborhood had dressed the largest bear ever killed in that locality. It weighed upwards of 400 pounds. Brain had been shot that afternoon while foraging for apples.

The Right Way to Walk. In the August Woman's Home Companion appears an article by William J. Cornie entitled "Every Girl Should Know the Right Way to Stand, Sleep and Walk." Following is an extract from the article showing what his advice is as to the correct position in walking:

"The proper way to walk is with the foot almost flat so that the weight of the body at each step is distributed over the entire sole of the advanced foot. The heel should touch the ground first and foot point straight ahead. Do not attempt to stiffen the knees in military style, but let them give somewhat with each step; let the arms swing naturally at the sides and take a moderately long stride. If you do considerable walking, and hold the body erect with the chest high, you need not worry about the correct way, because in order to cover ground rapidly you will strike the ground the heel first and in a long walk anyone who toes out will observe that there is an ever-increasing tendency to point the foot straight ahead."
